THE BOND ISSUE

Mortgage the Future?
South Carolina, as a state, is not and has not been wealthy. There are numbers of well-to-do and a few wealthy men in the state, but they are a minority of the whole people.

Of the 725,000 white people, at least 300,000 are poor. About 125,000 are wage earners and tenants and the 150,000 who live in their own homes are, for the most part, poor.

The public debt of South Carolina, however, has been reduced to about $6,000,000. That is not a large debt. With a few years of prosperity the state would be in financial condition to go forward. It would be possible to improve our school and college system rapidly, so that we might hope to get away from our unenviable place as the next to the most illiterate state of the forty-eight. It would be possible to build better roads, to spend money for the intelligent protection of the public health—gradually to move up abreast of the more fortunate commonwealths. One of the great advantages that we should have, in future, is freedom from a heavy public debt.

If we conclude, however, to issue bonds and with them to buy cotton worth seven cents or less in the open market, we take the risk of increasing the state debt to $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. We are minded, by the way, of a small group of men who own shares in cotton mills, who intrinsically one hundred cents or more on the dollar, and they wish the state, while issuing bonds, would give them thirty per cent more than market value for their shares. Really, they have lost millions of dollars in these shares, but if the state would become a bidder for them, perhaps their market price would rapidly rise. Of course South Carolina's purchase of cotton might "bull" cotton prices.

In case the cotton should not be salable at ten cents a pound, the people would be saddled with a great debt. Public debts are seldom paid. A mortgage on a state is only foreclosed by an army with big guns. Public debts, when they mature, are refunded—that is, the bonds are renewed. Who believes that a new ten million or twenty million dollar bond issue would be paid in ten, in twenty, or in forty years? To what example of the paying of the principal of such a debt can one point?

Of course we can borrow money, from ourselves, by issuing bonds for cotton, to recoup the losses on cotton in 1914—and we can repeat the process in 1915, if we choose. For the time, we get it by doing so, be a great deal cheaper. We should simply spend the proceeds of a mortgage that our children and children's children would stagger under. The question is, would the issue of the bonds and purchase of the cotton at ten cents a pound make the cotton worth ten cents a pound?—The State.

HAPPINESS.

A man who dedicates his life to knowledge becomes habituated to pleasure which carries with it no reproach; and there is one security that he will never lose that pleasure which is paid for by anguish of heart—his pleasures are all cheap, all dignified and all innocent, and, as far as any human being can expect permanence in this changing scene, he has secured a happiness which no malignity of fortune can ever take away, but which must cleave to him while he lives, ameliorating every good and diminishing every evil of his existence.—Sydney Smith.

ANDERSON YOU CAN DO BETTER IN ANDERSON

Mr. Fleishmann of B. Fleishmann & Bros. stated yesterday to a reporter for the Intelligencer that their sales for last Saturday were considerably more than they were for the corresponding Saturday of last year.

On Monday, Mr. Parker, of Parker & Bolt, stated that since the slightly cooler weather had set in their business had shown quite an increase, and that it was all that they could expect for last Saturday.

Yesterday Mr. Shoemaker, the District Manager for Kress, stated that their sales for the opening of their new store in Anderson had exceeded their expectations by quite a great deal; that he knew before he came here that this was a good town, but since he had been here several weeks he had seen enough to convince him that Anderson was in a very much better shape financially than most towns throughout the South this particular time. That when one walked down the street here, you saw every indication of a live town, but in quite a number of towns now the streets were decorated and had the appearance of Sunday.

And so on ad libitum.
